

Content Update

Hello, I'm Scott French, the Runway Safety Group manager. Runway excursions are a serious safety risk. During cold-weather operations, the chance for runway excursions may go up because of slippery conditions due to snow and ice and changing wind patterns.

In this update, you'll hear from pilots, airport operators, controllers, runway safety specialists, and union representatives on the importance of reducing runway excursions during winter operations.

From an Air Traffic perspective, our goal is to give pilots the best chance to fly a stabilized approach.

Please read the tip sheets in this support tool and discuss them with your fellow controllers and supervisors.

Safety is our business. Let's work together to reduce the risks of runway excursions.

Thank you.
